by TORBJORN BLOMDAHL

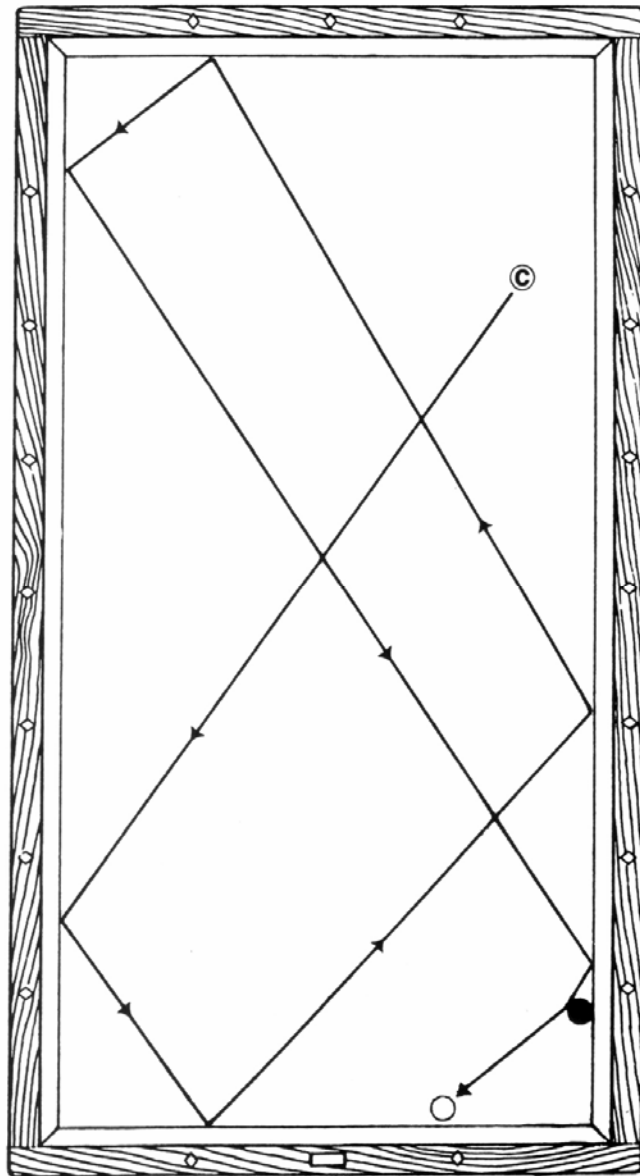

THE MOST DIFFICULT shot I ever made in a crucial situation occurred at the 1985 World Team Championships in Bordeaux, France. The tournament consisted of two-man teams. My father and I, representing Sweden, teamed to win the European Championship.

We were playing the U.S. team of Allen Gilbert and Frank Torres. In the first game I beat Gilbert and my father defeated Torres. Then my father lost to Gilbert, so I needed a tie or win against Torres to give the Swedish team the victory in that round.

The game was 30 points, equal innings, and the score was 29-29. I had started the game, so I had to make the point. I was left with the difficult shot shown in the diagram. To make matters worse, it was virtually impossible to play safe.

The red ball was frozen to the long rail and the second ball was almost frozen along the short rail. The cue ball was at the head of the table. I decided to play six rails first, hitting the last rail just before the red ball. I knew it would be difficult because you have to hit the red ball very thin. I hit the shot with left English. Normally, you would lose the English before the shot is completed, but I had an advantage because this particular table was playing very long. The cue ball held the English all the way through the fifth rail, so when it was approaching the sixth rail it was still rotating. The rotation made it possible to score the point even with a thicker hit on the red.

The hit was perfect and the cue ball hit the second ball just about full. Frank then made his break shot and the tie gave Sweden a 5-3 victory.
