A special fluke

When you're in Cairo, you should also take the time to see the sights of the city and the surrounding area. That's what Austrian Heinrich Weingartner thought, forgetting that his tournament game was about to start in a few hours.

He barely made it to the tournament venue - the Semiramis Hotel in Cairo. The referee refused to give him any warm-up time because he had only arrived in the hall two minutes before the start of the game. Still shaky from the rush and excitement, he hit the red ball too thin on the break, but the cue ball bounced off two cushions and luckily ended up near the corner for a carom. In addition, the ideal position off the balls was still there, and after 35 minutes of concentrated play, the required 500 points were scored in the first inning.
